World slightly happier than it used to be

Los Angeles Times

Great news, Earthlings! As a whole, you were 0.5 percent happier from 2010 to 2012 than you were from 2005 to 2007.

Statisticians may think that's a negligible number, but part of being happy is looking on the bright side, right?

This information on world happiness comes courtesy of the 2013 World Happiness Report, published by the United Nations' Sustainable Development Solutions Network.

Researchers analyzed data on happiness collected from people living in more than 150 countries to discover which have the happiest—and unhappiest—citizens and to see how happiness has shifted around the world over a five-year period.

The authors found that in general, happiness was up 7 percent in Latin America and the Caribbean, up 5.1 percent in East Asia and up 5.9 percent in the Commonwealth of Independent States (former Soviet republics). It was down 11.7 percent in the Middle East and North Africa and down 6.8 percent in South Asia.

WHAT ABOUT THE U.S.?

America ranked as the 17th-happiest country—slightly happier than the citizens of Ireland (No. 18) and a little less happy than our neighbors in Mexico (No. 16). Americans saw their overall happiness drop by about 3 percent over the five-year period between surveys.

To determine which countries are the happiest, the researchers asked an average of 3,000 people per country to rank their overall sense of life satisfaction on a scale of 1 to 10.

After analyzing tens of thousands of responses, the researchers identified six main dimensions to happiness, including income, mental and physical health, social support, freedom to make your own choices, being inclined to help others and living under a government that doesn't seem corrupt.

Now here's a black struggle

Yusef Williams

» redeye@tribune.com
» @lovefromthbrain

Can I get a black movie NOT about the struggle?

I mean, I love movies as much as the next guy: I am a believer in the idea that all movies are good if you give them a chance. The fact that I will still watch anything made by Adam Sandler is a testament to this belief.

Every year, I look forward to the massive amount of movies that will be released. And every year I look for one movie in particular: the black movie that is not about the struggle.

I don't go to the movies to be educated. When I want to learn something, I read about it. When I go to the movies, I go to escape the monotony of my daily existence and lose myself for a few hours in a story.

That's why I avoid movies like "42." I don't want to retreat to a world where white men spit on a baseball player because of the color of his skin. That's not entertaining; that's infuriating. It harkens to the dark days of mass ignorance and, to be frank, it makes me mad.

The only solace I take in a movie like "42" is that it was written by a white man and that maybe by telling Jackie Robinson's story he is in some way absolving his white guilt.

It's worse when black writers do it. It's like black screenwriters see white writers penning films about the horrific trials and tribulations that African-Americans must endure—as in Tate Taylor's "The Help"—and black screenwriters such as John Ridley and Geoffrey S. Fletcher respond by writing equally horrific screenplays such as "Precious," "Red Tails" or the upcoming "12 Years a Slave."

If it isn't the black man trying to excel in the white man's world after years of suffering in "Lee Daniels' The Butler," it's the black woman struggling to find a good man in David E. Talbert's "Baggage Claim." Either way, it's always a struggle. It's always about how hard it is and how depressing it is and how much one has to overcome to win.

What about fun? What about adventure? What about mysteries or science fiction or romantic quirky love without the fight?

I was taught there are only four types of stories: man vs. man, man vs. nature, man vs. machine and man vs. self. Am I to believe that the only stories we have to tell is man vs. man—specifically, black man vs. white man? I refuse.

Shonda Rhimes wrote "Princess Diaries 2." Marlon Wayans wrote "A Haunted House." Byron Minns wrote "Black Dynamite." These movies were fun. Not Oscar-worthy—well, maybe "Black Dynamite" was—but still fun. And they were entertaining.

I get it. "Our" stories must be told. And I appreciate the way Ryan Coogler humanized Oscar Grant with "Fruitvale Station." Still, I left that movie feeling the same way I do leaving many a movie of that genre: mad. And I don't go to the movies to get upset. I go to be entertained.

So, once again I am looking at the long list of movies to be released in 2014 and once again I am without a black struggle-less movie. Maybe 2015 will be my year.

YUSEF WILLIAMS IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

Facebook, Twitter and several email servers experienced intermittent outages Thursday.

Twitter appeared to be the only site still experiencing a major outage as of about 3 p.m. CDT. The problems on Twitter began shortly after 2 p.m., according to the website downrightnow.com. Tweets appeared to be publishing normally on outside applications such as TweetDeck.

Some users trying to access Facebook also ran into trouble throughout the day.

Issues accessing video sharing site YouTube appeared to start before noon, and the site was mostly back to normal after 2 p.m.

Additionally, Yahoo Mail experienced problems Thursday, which also appeared to be rectified by mid-afternoon.

Jail population rising

Police crackdown, closing of mental health facilities cited as causes

Chicago Tribune

With his burglary case stuck in the court system for the past two years, Reginald Brown has plenty of time to consider his future. Sitting in a mental health unit at Cook County Jail, he gazes at a piece of paper with a cross colored on it that he taped to the bottom of the bunk over his own bed.

"It's where I pray to God that something good will happen for me, that maybe this time I don't have to go to prison," he said.

Brown, who says he has schizophrenia, is one of the mentally ill inmates swelling the jail's population. After dipping to 8,900 in 2011, the average annual jail population—primarily inmates awaiting trial—has been on the rise, with the daily count now frequently more than 10,000, the highest totals since 2007. About 5 percent of detainees at the jail have been awaiting trial for more than two years, according to the sheriff's office.

With that rise in population, Chicago has regained its spot, once held by Houston, as home of the most populous single-site jail in the country—and also effectively Illinois' largest mental health facility.

Jail overcrowding is a complex and stubborn problem that's been around for decades, driven by the number of Chicago police arrests, the pace at which judges and attorneys move cases through the system and Cook County budget pressures. While the jail is overcrowded, detainees no longer sleep on mattresses on the floor, as they did during some other episodes of overcrowding, and the sheriff, whose operation of the jail is monitored by a federal judge, no longer assigns inmates to sleep on bunks in shifts.

The exception is at Cermak Health Services, the county-run hospital on the jail grounds where acutely mentally ill inmates are treated and patients sometimes sleep on mattresses on the floor, according to the sheriff's office.

Each person held at the jail costs county taxpayers about $143 a day—$190 a day for the mentally ill—and overtime costs for correctional officers are soaring. As of Thursday, an additional 324 Cook County detainees were being housed at six jails elsewhere in Illinois.

Sheriff Tom Dart attributes the growing jail population to a Chicago police crackdown in violent neighborhoods, which contributed to jail admissions last year rising for the first time in a decade; a backlogged court system that keeps inmates in jail about 20 percent longer than five years ago; and a surging mentally ill population fueled in part by the closing last year of six Chicago mental health clinics and the Tinley Park Mental Health Center.

"We're sort of the receptacle of every conceivable problem in society here, and now the most convenient one for them to dump on us is the mentally ill," Dart said. "There's one guy who can't say no, and that's the sheriff, so dump them on him."

Syria agrees to ban weapons

6 GENEVA Syria applied on Thursday to sign up to the global ban on chemical weapons, as U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry and Russian Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov discussed a Russian plan under which Damascus would give up its arsenal of poison gas.

The United Nations said it had received Syria's application to join the Chemical Weapons Convention, shortly after President Bashar Assad promised to deliver it within days. Washington immediately warned Syria against stalling tactics to avoid military strikes.

As he began talks in Geneva with Lavrov, Kerry said force might still be needed against Syria if diplomacy over Assad's chemical weapons stockpile fails.

"President Obama has made clear that should diplomacy fail force might be necessary to deter and degrade Assad's capacity to deliver these weapons," Kerry said.

"Expectations are high. They are high for the United States perhaps even more[so] for Russia to deliver on the promise of this moment. This is not a game and I said that to my friend Sergei when we talked about it initially," Kerry said. "It has to be real. It has to be comprehensive. It has to be verifiable. It has to be credible. It has to be timely and implemented in a timely fashion, and finally there ought to be consequences if it doesn't take place."

Obama, whose attention has been consumed by Syria since he threatened military strikes to punish Assad's government for a poison gas attack that killed hundreds of people in Damascus suburbs two weeks ago, said he was now turning to domestic priorities while backing Kerry's efforts.

This week's eleventh-hour Russian initiative interrupted a Western march to war, persuading Obama to put strikes on hold.

Syria, which denies it was behind that attack, has agreed to Moscow's proposal that it give up its chemical weapons stocks, averting what would have been the first direct Western intervention in a war that has killed more than 100,000 people.

Conservatives split over budget plan

8 WASHINGTON In the midst of an international crisis, the prospect of a government shutdown intensified Wednesday as House conservatives balked at Republican leaders' efforts to pass a spending bill that did not explicitly eliminate funds for President Obama's healthcare law.

Conservatives denounced the leadership's plan as "hocus-pocus." They held firm on using the threat of shutting down the government as a lever to stop the debut of the law's online insurance marketplaces Oct. 1. A vote planned for Thursday was abruptly canceled.

The current fiscal year ends Sept. 30. Congress has failed to pass any of the bills to fund government operations after that date. Unless both houses pass a spending bill by then, a host of government agencies will have to close.

Teachers spent $1.6 billion on school supplies last year

Reuters

Parents across the country met the start of a new school year by dropping off their children along with mounds of supplies: crayons, folders, hand sanitizers, paper towels and much, much more.

But with school budgets crunched, those supplies bought by parents are still not enough. To make up the slack, teachers have to reach into their own pockets. Last year, American teachers spent an average of $485 on school supplies, according to the 2013 Retail Market Awareness Study from the National School Supply and Equipment Association. That comes to $1.6 billion in total.

This spending is ingrained and prevalent—99.5 percent of teachers spend out-of-pocket on school supplies, the NSSEA survey found, and there is even a line item for it on federal income tax forms. Teachers in grades K-12 can claim up to $250 each in unreimbursed expenses. They can claim any amount over that on a separate line, as an unreimbursed employee expense, but they are then subject to the same rules as everyone else—only the amount above 2 percent of adjusted gross income is deductible.

There are also special rules about deductions for clergy and members of the military, but the bulk of out-of-pocket spending for salaried employees actually comes from other professions.

No matter what your career, it pays to be more savvy about what expenses are reimbursable and what ones are not.

In 2010, the last year of data available, taxpayers claimed some $72 billion in unreimbursed employee expenses, according to data from the Internal Revenue Service. The largest number of claims came from those with income between $100,000 and $200,000—more than 4 million returns, totaling $19 billion in expenses, or roughly $4,700 per return.

This is partially because lower-income workers tend to take the standard deduction and pay more in taxes than they might have to, says Lisa Greene-Lewis, TurboTax's lead certified public accountant. Another reason is that in higher-income jobs, the expenses for travel, continuing education and business meals add up a lot faster than stacks of construction paper.

HERE ARE SOME OF THE OTHER WAYS JOBS CAN COST YOU:

UNIFORMS AND ACCESSORIES

For police officers, firefighters, nurses and tradesmen, uniforms are often not provided by the employer, or there are specialty boots and shoes that are the employee's responsibility. Those specialty uniforms—which you would not wear in everyday life—are deductible as unreimbursed expenses.

FREQUENT DRIVING

Mileage is one of the top items claimed as an unreimbursed deduction, says Mike Habib, a tax adviser with his own practice in Whittier, Calif. It is not just salesmen who are in their cars a lot. Habib says that among people who claim mileage, 20 to 30 percent of their total driving time is business-related, not counting commuting.

CONTINUING EDUCATION

Financial advisers, accountants, doctors and other professionals often need continuing education to keep their licenses in force, but it is not always covered as an employee expense. Habib consulted with a nurse who took a continuing education course in Japan. While her employer gave her the time off to make the trip, it did not cover her expenses, which amounted to $8,000.

THAT BIG MISCELLANEOUS CATEGORY

Not all business travel gets reimbursed, nor do all meals with clients or gifts for clients (such as the wine and throw pillows real estate agents give their customers). Then there are magazine and newspaper subscriptions and even—for people involved in media—the cost of their cable TV service.

ALL OF THE ABOVE

One profession that pulls all of these elements together at once is long-distance trucking. For those who are employed by a company, as opposed to working as independent contractors, out-of-pocket expenses can range from $7,000 to $12,000 on a $50,000 salary, says Jim Stowell, a tax accountant who owns five H&R Block franchises and also a trucking company in Burlington, Wis. Drivers incur expenses for gloves and boots, equipment for their vehicles, a per diem expense for meals on the road, license fees and also road trip charges like off-route tolls.

The Bears OWN Adrian Peterson—when the league MVP is not owning them

By Jack M Silverstein | FOR REDEYE

Get ready, Bears fans: Adrian Peterson is coming to town. The Monsters of the Midway have had a roller-coaster ride defending the running back—and reigning NFL MVP—called “All Day.” Here’s a look at the good, the bad and the ugly.

JACK M SILVERSTEIN IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR. SAY HEY @READ JACK.

THE GOOD

Nov. 14, 2010:
Bears 27, Vikings 13

Peterson: 75 total yards

Peterson missed the second Bears game in both 2010 and 2011, but the way he played in the first ones, he might have been better off. The Bears closed this game with a 20-3 run while holding Peterson to 51 rushing yards and stopping him on his only third-down carry.

They said it: “This was probably our best overall game in all three phases.”

—Bears safety Chris Harris (Source: Tribune)

Oct. 16, 2011:
Bears 39, Vikings 10

Peterson: 39 total yards, 1 TD

One of the worst games of Peterson’s career, and one of only 12 times he’s been held under 40 yards rushing. His only touchdown was a 4-yarder that cut the Bears lead to 16, but Devin Hester returned the ensuing kickoff 98 yards for a score. Peterson also caught one pass—for no gain. Success!

Nov. 25, 2012: Bears 28, Vikings 10

Peterson: 138 total yards, 1 fumble lost

After losing at home to Houston and getting smoked by San Francisco, the Bears needed a win to get back on track. They got it, and then some. Peterson gained a respectable 108 yards rushing, but the Bears kept him out of the end zone for only the third time in their rivalry.

They said it: “They wanted to make a statement. I thought it was more so what we did, giving the ball away, not making routine plays.”

THE BAD

CHARLES CHERNEY/TRIBUNE FILE

Oct. 14, 2007: Vikings 34, Bears 31

Peterson: 361 total yards, 3 TDs

The league was still figuring Peterson out when the Vikings came to Soldier Field in October 2007. At this point, Peterson's career rushing high was 112 yards. Then THIS happened. Touchdown runs of 67, 73 and 35 yards. Four kick returns for 128 yards, including a 53-yarder to set up Minnesota's winning field goal. No team would ever overlook him again.

They said it: "We stunk. We played horrible. He's a good player, but ... he shouldn't get that many yards."

—Bears defensive lineman Alex Brown (Source: Associated Press)

Nov. 30, 2008: Vikings 34, Bears 14

Peterson: 131 rushing yards, 1 TD

The backbreaking play of this game was a 99-yard touchdown pass to former Bear Bernard Berrian that gave the Vikings a lead they would never lose, in a game that gave them a division lead they would never relinquish. But Peterson was steady, scoring one of his 25 career 1-yard touchdowns. He has seven against the Bears, the most versus any opponent.

They said it: "The guy poses a problem for every team he plays, especially for us. You could definitely say he has our number."

—Bears linebacker Lance Briggs (Source: Tribune)

Dec. 9, 2012: Vikings 21, Bears 14

Peterson: 154 yards rushing, 2 TDs, 1 fumble out of bounds

The Bears had a chance to knock the Vikings out of the playoff race and couldn't do it. Peterson's 154 rushing yards accounted for 62 percent of Minnesota's offense, and both his touchdowns were 1-yarders. Peterson gained 74 of his 154 yards on the first two drives.

They said it: "[Peterson] came out playing fast, playing hard ... It was the first drive ... I thought we did a pretty good job after that."

—Bears cornerback Kelvin Hayden (Source: Tribune)

Adrian Peterson is tackled by (from left) Major Wright, Nick Roach and Charles Tillman on October 16, 2011. Peterson only racked up 39 total yards in the game.

THE UGLY

Oct. 19, 2008: Bears 48, Vikings 41

Peterson: 121 yards rushing, 2 TDs

The highest scoring game in Bears-Vikings history was also the wackiest. The Bears scored touchdowns on a blocked punt, a muffed punt and an offensive fumble, while also getting interceptions from four players. Meanwhile, Peterson chewed them up for 121 rushing yards and two scores.

They said it: "It feels like we keep killing ourselves. We put up [439] yards on a pretty good defense."

—Peterson (Source: Associated Press)

Brian Urlacher tries to take down Peterson in 2008.

JIM PRISCHING/TRIBUNE FILE

Dec. 28, 2009: Bears 36, Vikings 30

Peterson: 137 total yards, 2 TDs, 1 fumble lost

The Bears were out of the playoff race while the Vikings were finishing a division-winning season, while Peterson ran for 94 yards, caught three passes for 43 yards and scored twice. You can't call this a great Bears performance, but the Bears won, thanks in large part to Hunter Hillenmeyer forcing Peterson to fumble in overtime. The Bears won on the next play on a 39-yard touchdown pass to Devin Aromashodu.

We picked the best answers from our Twitter followers. It's that simple. What are you waiting for?

1	Who's the Adrian Peterson of Chicago sports right now?	Is an acceptable answer "Jay Cutler's baby"?	Jay Cutler. Both have won a single playoff game and neither will be with the Bears next season.	It's still Adrian Peterson, the Bears running back from 2002-09.	Marc Trestman.	@Chitown_Ryan Chris Salo, because he's gotta be on something, right?
2	What should be the Blackhawks' focus during training camp?	Easy! Keeping plenty of Coors Light in the locker room.	Stay healthy, stay healthy, stay healthy and, in addition, improve the power play. Also, stay healthy.	That RV Hall of Fame in Elkhart, Ind. It's awesome!	Repeating.	@Lloyd_Hamilton Swimming. For when the ice melts.
3	Without their playoff beards, the Blackhawks players are ...	... a thousand times more attractive.	... Stanley Cup champions.	... the defending Stanley Cup champions. Damn, that's just fun to type.	... cute.	@linswag ... like Miley Cyrus. Naked.
4	How should the Sky prepare for the upcoming WNBA playoffs?	You're joking, right? Y'all know NASCAR just began the playoffs!	Start growing playoff underarm hair.	Challenge the Bulls to a scrimmage? You'd watch the hell out of that.	They're women. Practice jump shots and layups.	@wallyshabbi By having Derrick Rose turn into Juwanna Mann.

Urlacher: Cutler never called me

Brian Urlacher says the only former teammate he did not hear from following his retirement was Bears quarterback Jay Cutler.

The former linebacker, in an appearance on "In Depth With Graham Bensinger" that will air on Yahoo! Sports, said it gave him an idea of where he stood with Cutler.

Cutler confirmed Thursday that he has not reached out to Urlacher.

"I did not hear from Jay out of all the guys I played with," Urlacher said. "Maybe we weren't as close as we could have been. That's the way it is."

"It's not his job to text me. Maybe that's not his thing, which is fine. ... I felt I stood up for him a lot more than anyone else over the past three or four years in the media because that guy takes a lot of grief too. ... But that's our business. Guys are going to take grief and that is the way it goes."

Cutler, who sounded surprised that Urlacher would be bothered by that, said Thursday: "I haven't spoken to Brian. I did not call him, so I guess I'll reach out to him."

Urlacher said he was excited when the Bears traded two first-round draft picks, a third-round pick and Kyle Orton for Cutler on April 2, 2009, but he liked Orton at the time.

"It was a tough situation with him coming in," Urlacher said. "They traded two first-round picks for him. They got rid of our quarterback at the time, Kyle Orton, who I didn't think needed to be traded in the first place."

"But also I was excited. We got a quarterback who can possibly take us to the Super Bowl."

Former Bears linebacker Brian Urlacher (right) said Jay Cutler was the only former teammate who did not call him following his retirement announcement. BRIAN CASSELLA/TRIBUNE FILE

These 10 must-see acts at Riot Fest have been around the block

By Andy Downing | FOR REDEYE

While the summer's biggest fests (Pitchfork, Lollapalooza, etc.) largely belonged to the kids, Riot Fest, which takes place Friday through Sunday in Humboldt Park, gives the old guard a chance to shine. Here's a quick guide to the 10 acts you need to catch this weekend.

ANDY DOWNING IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.
REDEYE@TRIBUNE.COM | @REDEYEMUSIC

1 ATMOSPHERE

Set time: 7:45-8:45 p.m. Friday, Riot stage

Debut album: "Overcast!"

Release date: Aug. 1997

Also happening at the time: Elton John sings "Candle in the Wind" at Princess Diana's funeral.

Why you need to see them: Minneapolis rapper Slug is never afraid to drop his guard, or throw a punch.

Song we hope to hear: "Little Man." The sound of Slug fully embracing adulthood.

2 FALL OUT BOY

Set time: 9:45-11 p.m. Friday, Riot stage

Debut album: "Take This To Your Grave"

Release date: May 2003

Also happening at the time: "Finding Nemo" is released in movie theaters.

Why you need to see them: Few frontmen are blessed with Patrick Stump's pipes.

Song we hope to hear: "Sugar, We're Goin'

Down." Sure, the Chicago natives explored new avenues on this year's "Save Rock and Roll," but we still love this early slice of pop-punk perfection.

Dessa

Joan Jett

3 DESSA

Set time: 4:15-4:45 p.m.
Friday, Roots stage
Debut album: "A Badly Broken Code"
Release date: January 2010
Also happening at the time: Beyonce takes home six trophies at the 52nd Annual Grammy Awards.

Why you need to see them: The MC's albums could double as poetry collections.

Song we hope to hear: "Dear Marie." Relationships can be complicated, and few write about them more deftly.

4 JOAN JETT & THE BLACKHEARTS

Set time: 8:30-9:30 p.m.
Friday, Rock stage
Debut album: "I Love Rock 'n' Roll"
Release date: November 1981

Also happening at the time:

"Raiders of the Lost Ark" closes out 1981 as the year's top box office draw, grossing more than $200 million.

Why you need to see them: More than 30 years on, these songs still incite fist-pumping.

Song we hope to hear: "I Love Rock 'n' Roll." It's a classic for a reason.

5 GUIDED BY VOICES

Set time: 4:45-5:45 p.m.
Saturday, Roots stage
Debut album: "Devil Between My Toes"
Release date: February 1987
Also happening at the time: Bon Jovi's "Livin' on a Prayer" reaches No. 1 on the Billboard Hot 100.

Why you need to see them: The prolific Ohio crew undoubtedly influenced whatever indie rock band you're listening to at the moment.

Song we hope to hear: "Motor Away." A thumb in the eye to anyone who ever doubted the rockers.

6 PUBLIC ENEMY

Set time: 7:45-8:45 p.m.
Saturday, Rock stage
Debut album: "Yo! Bum Rush the Show"
Release date: April 1987
Also happening at the time: "The Simpsons" first appear as a series of televised shorts on "The Tracey

Ullman Show."

Why you need to see them: Even if Flavor Flav has become a caricature, Chuck D still is the man.

Song we hope to hear: "Black Steel in the Hour of Chaos." Sadly, it's as timely now as the day it was written.

7 MISSION OF BURMA

Set time: 1:25-1:55 p.m. Sunday, Roots stage
Debut album: "Vs."
Release date: 1982
Also happening at the time: Time magazine names the computer its "Man of the Year," the first time the honor is bestowed on a non-human.

Why you need to see them: They've been keeping earplug manufacturers in business for more than three decades.

Song we hope to hear: "That's How I Escaped My Certain Fate." Two minutes of controlled detonation disguised as rock 'n' roll.

8 AGAINST ME!

Set time: 2:35-3:20 p.m. Sunday, Roots stage
Debut album: "Against Me! Is Reinventing Axl Rose"
Release date: March 2002
Also happening at the time: TLC's Lisa "Left Eye" Lopes dies in a car accident in Honduras.
Why you need to see them: Tom Gabel was a great frontman, but Laura Jane Grace is fearless.

Song we hope to hear: "The Ocean." The song hinted at Gabel's transition to womanhood, and it would be fitting to hear it from Grace's perspective.

9 THE REPLACEMENTS

Set time: 9:15-10:30 p.m.
Sunday, Riot stage
Debut album: "Sorry Ma, Forgot to Take Out the Trash"
Release date: August 1981
Also happening at the time: Seven-time Wimbledon champ Roger Federer is born in Switzerland.

Why you need to see them: Recent reports from Riot Fest Toronto suggest the newly reunited band came back swinging—and not at one another, for once.

Song we hope to hear: "Bastards of Young." "Unsatisfied" showed off the band's ragged heart, but this song makes you want to kick down walls.

ONLINE ONLY: 5 MORE TO SEE

We've got five more suggestions for you to check out this weekend. Like listening to Janelle Monae? Want to bring back memories from a '90s band? We've got you covered. Visit redeye.chicago.com to see our list.

10 BOB MOULD

Set time: 3:20-4 p.m. Sunday, Riot stage
Debut album: (post-Husker Du) "Workbook"
Release date: April 1989
Also happening at the time: "Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade" closes out 1989 as the year's top box office draw, grossing more than $474 million. It seems the more things change ...
Why you need to see them: The man was in freaking Husker Du.
Song we hope to hear: "If I Can't Change Your Mind." Pop songs simply don't come any better than this.

VIOLENT FEMMES ARE ABOUT TO ROCK RIOT FEST

Chicago Tribune

Unbelievably, an album containing “Blister In the Sun,” “Add It Up,” “Gone Daddy Gone” and “Kiss Off,” four of the Violent Femmes’ most sexy, pained and delightful rock ‘n’ roll songs, did not sell well upon arrival in 1983. It wasn’t until five years later, after the Milwaukee trio had stopped playing together, then reunited, that they realized their self-titled debut had evolved into sort of a hit. “After we all did other things, to go back and just get a response, especially to that first album, I might have thought, ‘Wow!’—not knowing if the audience would still be there,” says Gordon Gano, the band’s vocally anguished frontman. “It didn’t change anything. It just made it so we could continue forward, and have a career.”

Since “The Violent Femmes,” the trio has recorded a country album obsessed with religion and death, a weird novelty song decrying a girlfriend who grew fat and any number of straightforward radio songs. But they keep coming back to the 30-year-old debut, to the point that they play it in its entirety, beginning to end, during live shows.

“It’s still a very fresh thing we’re doing, and everybody else seems to like it,” says Gano by phone from Denver. “For our entire career, we never had a set list—[bassist] Brian Ritchie would always call out all the songs. There would be surprises that just happened in the moment. With this, it gets locked in. In a way, having a set list, for us, is completely a radical departure.”

In the early ’80s, Gano met Ritchie and percussionist Victor DeLorenzo, and they formed a band that was a little odd, especially for meat-and-potatoes Milwaukee. They played fast, jittery music with acoustic instruments, and Gano’s songs were at the midpoint between teen angst and childlike enthusiasm. He seemed angry and happy at the same time. Their break came when the Pretenders’ James Honeyman-Scott spotted the band performing on the street and alerted singer Chrissie Hynde, who invited them to open a show.

When the Femmes are together, they’re one of rock’s most consistent bands. In 1984, they put out “Country Death Song,” a chilling fable about a troubled father throwing his beloved daughter into a well; in 1991 came “American Music,” in which Gano’s masterfully creepy voice requests a prom date (and asks whether she does too many drugs).

Although he makes it clear by phone the latter song is about high school, the way he describes his junior-high experience matches its tone. “It’s around that time that everybody’s hormones are going nuts,” he says. “It all of a sudden [went from] a feeling of a completely safe environment to an unsafe environment. ... Some people have real trauma and experiences, and I didn’t, but yeah, it was not fun.”

The Femmes’ main challenge is staying together. DeLorenzo quit in 1993 and returned in 2000. Seven years later, Ritchie sued Gano in an effort to become half-owner of the band’s songs. Four years ago, they broke up again. Then they reunited last summer to play Milwaukee’s annual Summerfest. But DeLorenzo, in a nasty public letter referring to “a great deal of disrespect, dishonesty and greed,” abruptly quit afterward, leading the band to replace him with Dresden Dolls drummer Brian Viglione.

Gano responds with calmness. “I thoroughly enjoyed playing with Victor, with the shows

THE VIOLENT FEMMES
8:45 p.m. Saturday, Riot Fest that we did,” he says. “We just weren’t able to come to an agreement to go forward doing more shows. That’s certainly, absolutely, not the way I see it at all. I did see there was a nice picture, at least, that he had attached to [his statement], and the picture shows a certain lightheartedness.”

While the Femmes have sporadically toured and steadily released greatest-hits albums and reissues, they haven’t recorded new material together since 2000’s “Freak Magnet.” Asked whether they might put anything else out, Gano brushes off the question: “No, there are no plans.” He then launches into a history of the band’s lineup, which included a 10-year stint with drummer Guy Hoffman beginning in the ’90s. And he seems pleased when the subject is finally changed to football. Femmes fans will be relieved to know he has not changed his allegiance from the Packers to the Broncos. “No question, that’s my No. 1 team,” he says of Green Bay. “And Denver is kind of becoming my second.”

SOUND BOARD

KEEPING YOU PLUGGED IN TO TODAY'S MOST BUZZWORTHY MUSIC

ALBUM REVIEW

Stay Trippy

Juicy J

By Ernest Wilkins

REDEYE SOUND BOARD

Do you have a "cool uncle?" The one on a never-ending mission to prove he's "with what these young kids are about," and spends the entire family reunion telling stories about how he used to get after it back in his day—even though you're just trying to eat some damn ham and get through this hangover? This album reminds me of that, in a good way. You get to see someone with supreme confidence and zero filter wax poetic about sex, drugs and the finer things.

An elder statement of ignorant party rap (if there's a Mount Rushmore of the sub-genre, it's Juicy Too Short, Uncle Luke and Kool Keith), Juicy continues to pave the way with this, his first album since joining Wiz Khalifa's Taylor Gang Records.

"Stay Trippy" shouldn't be taken for more than it is: a compilation of sonic assault (a good thing), drug endorsement (a bad thing, unless you're responsible about it) and stripper appreciation (throw your money wherever you see fit; this is America).

No stranger to big beats from his days producing for Three 6 Mafia, you will never be able to say that a Juicy J record doesn't have great production. Mike Will Made It (who provides the smashes "Bandz A Make Her Dance" and "Show Out"), Lex Luger, Timbaland and Chicago's own Young Chop all lace Juicy J with the kind of thump that should make you buy some good speakers already. J even takes matters into his own hands on The Weeknd-sampled "Smokin' Rollin'."

This album is chock full of guests, from 2 Chainz to Jeezy to Big Sean to the late Pimp C. A guest roster that size usually would lead to the main artist being overshadowed. J takes an approach that other less-than-lyrical artists should follow: Talk about what you know and have fun doing it. He spits legit laugh-out-loud lines ("Your baby mama is not a 10, but when I'm drunk, she's close enough") and never tries to fight above his weight class. After listening to this album, I made it a personal life goal to party with Juicy J. (You may call it aiming low, I call it managing my expectations.)

The Justin Timberlake-featured "The Woods" is a misstep, an oasis of clarity in a desert of depravity. Other than that, this is a bona fide big-budget thump-a-thon. This is the music you should make bad decisions to, and I'm sure some of you already have—but I ain't one to gossip, so you ain't heard that from me.

LAKEVIEW EAST FESTIVAL OF THE ARTS

When: 10 a.m.-6 p.m. Saturday; 10 a.m.-5 p.m. Sunday

Where: Broadway between Belmont Avenue and Hawthorne Place

How much: $5 suggested donation

Don't miss: More than 175 juried artists display their work, from sculpture to jewelry to paintings, along Lakeview East's busy Broadway corridor. Cooking demonstrations from chef Chrissy Camba of Bar Pastoral (2:15 p.m. Sunday) and others take place on Broadway and Roscoe Street, while bands include Panda Riot (4 p.m. Sunday) and Band Called Catch (5:45 p.m. Saturday).

Mini-detours: Check out Lakeview's newest brewpub, DryHop Brewers (3155 N. Broadway) for made-on-premise beer and bar food, or keep it lighter with cheese and wine at Bar Pastoral (2947 N. Broadway). Since it's the end of the summer, squeeze in one last frozen treat at Paciugo (3241 N. Broadway) or Bobtail (2951 N. Broadway).

Dig up your studded belt: It's time for Riot Fest

By Kate Bernot | REDEYE

The Replacements. That's really all it should take to make you throw on an extra piece of black clothing and beeline for Riot Fest this weekend in Humboldt Park. Add to the lineup Fall Out Boy, Brand New, Pixies and every other band that your awkward self loved between 7th and 10th grade, and it's pretty much a no-brainer. Not into the punkier side of stuff? Two other fests—Crush in Old Town and Berghoff Oktoberfest—have your drinking needs covered, or you can get your art on at Lakeview East Festival of the Arts.

@REDEYEEATDRINK

Crush in Old Town

UPCOMING FESTS

Sept. 20: FestivAle (West Loop); Sept. 21: Lincoln Square Apple Fest; Sept. 21: Logan Square Beer Festival; Sept. 21: VeganMania (Streeterville);

CRUSH IN OLD TOWN

When: Noon-10 p.m. Saturday; noon-9 p.m. Sunday

Where: Wells Street between North Avenue and Schiller Street
How much: $7 suggested donation

Don't miss: Formerly the Wells Street Fall Fest, this low-key neighborhood jam is back for an 11th year. Wine, courtesy of Galleria Liquors, is the main draw, with 15-pour tasting passes available for $35 in advance ($40 at the gate), plus attendees can sign up for a grape-stomping competition at 2 p.m. daily. New this year is a food focus on mac 'n' cheese; local restaurants including Fireplace Inn, Kamehachi, Dinotto Ristorante, Orso's and more each will prepare a version of the dish and fest goers are encouraged to vote for their favorite. Craft beers and fest bands such as Wedding Banned (8 p.m. Saturday) and The Business (7 p.m. Sunday) round out the weekend.

Mini-detours: Take in some of the best views—and a few cocktails—at The J. Parker atop Hotel Lincoln (1816 N. Clark St.), or keep the party going until the wee hours at late-night lounge Drop (1909 N. Lincoln Ave.) For heartier food to soak up the wine you drank at the fest, seek out the European-inspired fare and laid-back atmosphere at The Glunz Tavern (1202 N. Wells St.)

RIOT FEST

When: 2:30-10:45 p.m. Friday; 11 a.m.-10:45 p.m. Saturday; 11 a.m.-10:45 p.m. Sunday

Where: Humboldt Park, Augusta Boulevard to Division Street and Sacramento Avenue to Kedzie Avenue

How much: Three-day passes sold out; Two-day passes (Sept. 13-14) available for $104.95; select single day passes available $54.98-$124.98 at riotfest.org.

Don't miss: Did I mention The Replacements? OK, good. Definitely scour the full lineup, which includes acts as diverse as Joan Jett, Blink-182, Pixies, Blondie and Surfer Blood. Need some guidance? RedEye special contributor Andy Downing breaks down his top 10 acts on Page 20.

Mini-detours: You're going to need some caffeine to sustain you for the morning shows. Pop into Star Lounge (2521 W. Chicago Ave.) for some Dark Matter brew and a pastry, best enjoyed on the coffee bar's sunny back patio. Vegans, vegetarians (and the friends who love them) can fill up with breakfast or lunch at Flying Saucer (1123 N. California Ave.). At the end of the night, retire with a cheap beer in the divey confines of Archie's Iowa & Rockwell Tavern (2600 W. Iowa St.)

BERGHOFF OKTOBERFEST

When: 11 a.m.-9 p.m. Friday

Where: John C. Kluczynski Federal Plaza (230 S. Dearborn St.)

How much: Free to attend; daily beer tasting pass available for $15

Don't miss: Oh, it's officially fall when historic Berghoff restaurant dusts off its steins for another Oktoberfest bash. Bavarian-style music, beer and food descend on the outdoor plaza for three weekdays, with special Oktoberfest dishes served at the restaurant through Oct. 26. Tastings of the newly revamped Berghoff beers take place at 2:30 p.m. Keep an eye out for the Berghoff Brat—or track him at @BerghoffChicago—for a chance to win stuff.

Mini-detours: After all that German beer, head to Saucy Porka (400 S. Financial Place) for “bacos,” fist-sized bao sandwiches in flavors such as sofrito-marinated shrimp and soy-ginger tofu. If it's more booze you're after, duck into Ceres Cafe (141 W. Jackson Blvd.) in the lobby of the Board of Trade for some of the stiffest drinks in town.

Saturday Sept. 21st
 11:00am-10:00pm

Located in the Kendall College parking lot at 900 N Branch St. (near Chicago & Halsted)

The Wurst Festival

By Courtney Jacquin | REDEYE

Fest season is going strong into September with a new fest that promises to be the wurst. The Wurst Festival, coming to Daley Plaza from Sept. 18 to 20, celebrates local sausage-makers who use naturally pastured, sustainably raised meat from local farms.

"There's a renaissance of the butcher and sausage," said Mark Wilhelms, founder of Red Meat Market who is partnering with Family Farmed and the City of Chicago's Farmers Market Program to produce the fest. "I believe sausage is the new darling of the culinary world."

Spencer's Bangers, West Loop Salumi, Big Fork, Chef Martin's and more will be on-site, serving up sausage-on-a-stick, sausage cones and bison dogs for $5. Demonstrations on cooking with sausage and sausage and beer pairings from Lance Avery of Big Fork, Greg Laketek of West Loop Salumi, Greg Gunthorp of Gunthorp Farms and others are also scheduled.

The Wurst Fest also will host performers on its main stage each day. Mazes and Scott Lucas & the Married Men will perform Wednesday; The Lawrence Peters Outfit, DJ LA Jesus and Chicago Afrobeat Project on Thursday; and The Opposition Party and DJ Madrid with electric violinist Kat V on Friday. Admission is free.

Tempers boil as more food trucks vie for prime spots

Tribune

It's been more than a year since the City of Chicago passed an ordinance to allow on-board cooking on food trucks, but it hasn't been an easy ride since for operators trying to make a living on city streets.

There's no such thing as a sign-up sheet or schedule for the city's 30 official food truck locations (which the city said it eventually intends to increase based on popularity), and there's no association of food trucks, despite efforts to organize one.

What there is is a fledgling, vibrant industry experiencing some growing pains as the trucks try to reconcile their business needs and competitive instincts with the city's efforts to create a workable, user-friendly system. Here are five issues—#foodtruckproblems, you could say—that food truck owners in Chicago have been struggling with this summer.

Shortage of desirable spots

Thirty may sound like a large number of areas for 122 licensed food trucks, but a vast disparity exists in how the truck owners view the locations' desirability. No one is fighting on weekdays over the spot at, say, Southport Avenue near Addison Street. Instead, three areas have become truck magnets, luring more vehicles than often can be accommodated: Cityfront Plaza, in Streeterville; 600 W. Chicago Ave. (in front of the big office building that houses Groupon); and in Hyde Park between 57th and 59th streets on Ellis Avenue.

The Hyde Park location isn't even among the city-sanctioned spots, yet it appears to be the most popular of all, with 11 trucks lined up there on a recent Friday at lunchtime. That section of Ellis, at the heart of the University of Chicago campus, offers a long stretch of open curbside with few nearby restaurants to compete, and the trucks don't need to arrive in the wee hours to get a spot.

"Oh my God, it's insane. Now, people are coming like at 6 in the morning, 7 in the morning, they're parking their trucks, they're turning them off, and they're having cars deliver their food. ... There's not enough [good] spots, so we're all going to the same three spots that work."

—Sarah Weitz, The Fat Shallot co-owner

No parking guarantees

Steve Maxwell had spent most of his recent Thursday lunchtimes downtown selling Indian specialties out of his Curried food truck in the roundabout in front of NBC Tower, but on a late Thursday in July he pulled up at about 8:30 a.m. to find three other food trucks already parked in the designated food truck zone.

"I've been coming here for six months every Thursday," he protested, gesturing to the other trucks—Slide Ride up front, followed by Eleaven and Tamale Spaceship—as if they were interlopers. "Today if I don't get this spot, I'm screwed. I have all this food, and I'll have to throw it all away."

The Curried truck stayed, but at 11:30 a.m. a fifth truck showed up, Windy City Patty Wagon, which, unlike the other four trucks there, cooks its food on board. Without enough room to pull in behind Curried, Patty Wagon was sticking out a bit while owner Danny Herrera tried to persuade at least one of the other truck drivers to move along.

The city ordinance passed in July 2012 calls for trucks to obey a two-hour limit for each of the designated food truck locations. Herrera reasoned that if the Curried truck had arrived at 8:30 a.m. and was fourth in line, all of those trucks had exceeded their allotted time, so Patty Wagon deserved a spot.

Uh, no, the other drivers informed him. That's not how it works. This is Chicago, city of dubs.

"Today if I don't get this spot, I'm screwed. I have all this food, and I'll have to throw it all away."

—Steve Maxwell, Curried owner

"That's how you have to do things in the food truck industry: Get there early, get your spot. Otherwise you won't be able to sell."

—Gerardo Gutierrez, Eleaven driver

Trucks shirking the two-hour limit

After being turned away at Cityfront, Herrera called the 311 city service line to complain about the Cityfront Plaza situation.

"Sorry @theslideride @Eleaven @tamalespace101 and @GetCurriedAway we've been patient and friendly, but we had to file a complaint today because you're not abiding by the 2 hour rule in a food truck zone, especially at City Front," Herrera wrote on Twitter and Facebook. "Everyone should get a turn for lunch service there. We've been trying for 2 months to get in there. Not cool, guys."

Like most of the truck operators interviewed, Weitz said she doesn't abide the two-hour limit "because no one else does," but practical considerations also are involved.

The Fat Shallot cooks on board, and Weitz said setup takes an hour, and more time is needed to clean up afterward. Jimmy Nuccio, co-owner of the Beavers Coffee & Donuts truck, said he needs a half hour to get the oil hot and another half hour to break down after service.

"I think the two-hour rule is eventually going to be stricken from the ordinance because it's really not conducive for cooking," said Nuccio, who said sometimes a Beavers employee will park a car in a food truck spot overnight so the truck can take its place early in the morning.

To Weitz, this is a damned-if-you-do, damned-if-you-don't situation. "I don't know what the solution is, because if they start enforcing the two-hour rule, it's going to be bad for all of us, but people are just getting there earlier and earlier for those spots," she said.

Jennifer Lipford, communications director for the city's Business Affairs and Consumer Protection Department, said the city established the two-hour rule, in part, to prevent trucks from staking out spots and also to give more trucks the opportunity to use favored spots.

"We encourage owners experiencing difficulties to reach out to us," she said. "Recently, we've been working with owners to hear their concerns and explore opportunities for improvements."

"We're playing by the rules. We're going to stick to the two-hour limits."

—Danny Herrera, Windy City Patty Wagon owner

"It's a dog-eat-dog kind of thing. Survival of the fittest."

—Jimmy Nuccio, Beavers Coffee & Donuts truck co-owner

Distrust with the city

But distrust exists between some of Chicago's food trucks and the city. Amy Le, who used to own the DucknRoll truck, said many owners felt the city didn't listen to the concerns about the number and quality of designated spots and the 200-feet-from-a-restaurant rule. A lawsuit filed in November on behalf of the Schnitzel King and Cupcakes for Courage truck owners challenging the 200-foot rule and the city's requirement that trucks install GPS systems continues to move forward, with a status hearing scheduled for Sept. 27.

Lack of organization

Several truck owners say they'd still like to get a workable association going, though an attempt last year fizzled. "We had a discussion with a large group of the trucks about trying to set up a schedule that we would enforce as a group, but it takes one person not wanting to do it for it not to work," said Le, who had assumed a leadership role during her truck's operation. She noted that of 55 food truck owners in the discussion, 53 agreed to follow a schedule, but two said no. "I said, we can't enforce this if not everybody's on board."

"It is 300 times less stressful running a brick-and-mortar [restaurant] than a food truck."

—Amy Le, owner of restaurant Saucy Porka and former owner of now-defunct truck DucknRoll

Greg Mosko of North Pond

"I'm of the firm mindset that the time of sweet desserts is pretty much over," declares 33-year-old Greg Mosko, who has been the pastry chef at North Pond for nearly five years, previously working with Thomas Keller at Bouchon Bakery and The French Laundry. At North Pond, his desserts mirror the farm-to-table ethos of chef Bruce Sherman, so that, like Sherman's savory offerings, the dessert list is in near constant flux. For instance, a strawberry dessert with black pepper meringue, nicoise olive cake and feta cheese that dazzled us less than a month ago is but a memory today. But you can always count on multiple unexpected elements. "I like balance," he says. "If, in my head, the dessert needs a little added acidity, more crunch or a more herby aspect, that's where I kinda go."

Lisa Bonjour of MK

When this 28-year-old political science graduate decided to try her hand at cooking, she picked a Portland, Maine, restaurant she liked and asked if she could work free. That led to a part-time job and eventually to stints locally at Quince, Boka and Trenchermen. At MK, her desserts bear whimsical names such as Cake & Shake, Cuckoo for Cocoa-nuts and Strawberry Shorty (which contains no shortcake but does include cucumber). Bonjour creates distinct dishes from approachable, even familiar flavors. "I want [desserts] to be interesting enough that you want to keep eating," she says, "but I don't want it to be so interesting you worry that the ingredients don't go together."

Sarah Mispagel of Nightwood

Following bakery stints in San Diego, Portland, Ore., and Cincinnati, Sarah Mispagel landed in Chicago three years ago and celebrated her arrival by adding to her tattoo collection. She decided to ink the Morton Salt girl on her left arm—Morton being a Chicago institution, but more important is its role in her cooking philosophy. "Salt is the unsung hero of the pastry kitchen," the 27-year-old said. At Nightwood, her desserts strike a balance of not leaving diners buzzing with sugar highs, taking advantage of the natural sweetness from the season's produce and enhancing them with savory elements. A mid-August visit yielded a buttermilk panna cotta with brown butter madeleines and sunflower seeds, underscoring sweet notes of blueberry sorbet and slices of ripe peaches.

BILL HOGAN/
TRIBUNE FILEChris Teixeira of Homestead on the Roof

The sort of sweets you can expect from this 26-year-old Culinary Institute of America grad rather depends on which venue you're in. At West Town Bakery, look for bread, cupcakes, doughnuts, doughssants (Teixeira's doughnut-croissant answer to the cronut) and candy bars. At the Berkshire Room, the craft cocktail lounge in the Acme Hotel (where there's also a West Town Bakery outlet), look for updated 1950s inspirations, such as the bourbon creme brulee topped with a piece of blowtorched honeycomb. And at Homestead on the Roof, the second-floor perch offering indoor and outdoor dining, Teixeira aims for rustic elegance, seen in a Portuguese peasant cake dolled up with roasted plums, lemon confit, plum-buttermilk sherbet and creme fraiche Chantilly cream. Prior to this three-property executive pastry chef gig, Teixeira spent several years at Sixteen, working under notable pastry chefs Fahy and Sarah Kosikowski.

Thomas Raquel of Acadia

If there has been a disadvantage to Thomas Raquel's intricate dessert creations, it's that they've usually been available as part of chef Ryan McCaskey's multicourse tastings at Acadia. This makes the buy-in a bit formidable, although in-the-know locals pull into Acadia's limited-menu bar and order a la carte sweets there. Recently, however, the 26-year-old Raquel went the best-of-both-worlds route, introducing a three-course dessert tasting available exclusively at Acadia's bar. Actually, the $35 menu is more like five courses, when you factor in the pre-dessert (currently, tomato ice dotted with shards of green basil ice, surrounded by spiced tea foam) and the miniature chocolate-ganache whoopie pie mignardise. "When it comes to dessert, I always try to do justice to the ingredients," he says. "I think of how many textures I can create while keeping the ingredient true to itself." Raquel turned his back on med school to become a chef, proving there's more than one way to make people feel better.

THE DESSERTERS

5 PASTRY CHEFS YOU SHOULD KNOW*Tribune

The talent pool of pastry chefs in Chicago is deep, for which we all should be grateful. But except for a sainted few, those talented chefs don't have half the name recognition of their savory counterparts.

Judy Contino, Patrick Fahy,

Gale Gand, Mindy Segal: These are Chicago's household-name pastry chefs. Other, somewhat recognizable names include Meg Galus of Nomi Kitchen, Sarah Jordan of Boka Group, Leigh Omilinsky of Cafe des Architectes and Cindy Schuman of Sepia. That list deserves to be much longer.

Most pastry chefs toil anonymously, yet they're the ones delivering the all-important finale to your memorable meal. So we've spent the past month looking for under-the-radar pastry chefs whose names you ought to know.

ITALIAN BEEF

VS.

GRILLED CHEESE

FINAL FACEOFF

Grilled cheese or Italian beef? That's the choice that RedEye is asking Chicago's sandwich fans to make in the championship round of our Best Sandwich Tournament.

A Chicago favorite, Italian beef performed strongly from the beginning, taking down its first opponent, the French Dip, with ease and moving on to take down the fried chicken sandwich and the torta. Though it faced a favorite to win—the breakfast sandwich—in the Final Four, it won with 67 percent.

The fight for the remaining championship spot was not easily won, with pulled pork and grilled cheese both putting up a fight. Final Four polls closed Monday with grilled cheese ahead by just 3 percent.

But it's not over yet. The final sandwich showdown between Italian beef and grilled cheese is happening right now: Vote through noon Friday at redeyechicago.com/sandwich and stay tuned for the announcement of the winning sandwich.

Oscar nom for Larson

FAST PAISED

Matt Pais

» mpais@tribune.com
» @mattpais

It's extremely difficult to craft a movie about a topic as serious and complex as foster care and not make the experience of watching the film feel like work or an after-school special. Fortunately, "Short Term 12" is just special.

Writer-director Destin Cretton's SXSW prizewinner pulls off the trick of feeling neither grueling nor softened. Rather than manipulation or pummeling anguish, its goal is truth and release—something its characters know is anything but easy. In a breakout role that will earn an Oscar nod if there's any justice, Brie Larson ("The Spectacular Now," "21 Jump Street") stars as Grace, a supervisor at the titular center where she and her colleague Mason (John Gallagher Jr. of "The

Short Term 12
R

Newsroom") try to keep their romantic relationship a secret. At work, it's not about them and shouldn't be; there are too many teens who need guidance and support and, frequently, discipline. Grace develops a quick rapport with Jayden (Kaitlyn Dever), who's new to the facility but expects her dad to pick her up soon. The intuition and progression of the relationship doesn't just feel honest. It's crushingly real.

Transitioning between leadership and vulnerability, Larson is exceptional in her ability to thread Grace's experiences through her veins and behavior, rather than just words. "Your attitude is not helping either one of us," she tells Jayden, Grace proving expert at maintaining a calm level so as not to escalate another's. Delicately handling sensitive issues, Cretton establishes a nice balance between the kids' challenges and Grace and Mason's personal life while also suggesting the film could be a TV series. We learn useful information about the characters but still want more. Numerous performances, hiding and eventually revealing, deserve to be called knockouts.

Sure, Grace's unexpected pregnancy at first feels like an inevitability. Throw a rock at a shelf of independent dramas, and chances are good you'll hit one with a similar storyline. "Short Term 12," however, resembles "The Wrestler" in its ability to find richness in familiarity. Rather than "seen it before," you think, "This all feels right" and don't stop thinking about the movie when it ends. Besides, the pregnancy's place in the story is justified, not lazy.

Though some events and dialogue feel a tad deliberate, "Short Term 12" brings huge heart to the cyclical nature of trauma, not to mention what it takes to live with something difficult every day, and the help and hope needed during a never-ending process. Deep scars only heal so much.

'Populaire'

Cute but lightweight

FAST PAISED

Matt Pais

» mpais@tribune.com
» @mattpais

In the France of the retro romance "Populaire," typewriting contests in the late '50s had all the excitement of March Madness. Intense rivalries! Applauding fans shouting for their favorite typists! It's awesome, baby, with a very carefully typed capital A!

Um, no. The problem with depicting typing battles with the intensity of a major sport, or even a crossword showdown, is that you can't tell who's winning until the victor is announced. It's all just a lot of banging on the typewriter with no concept of who's the fastest and most accurate. Maybe director/co-writer Regis Roinsard should have displayed some kind of ticker about keystrokes per minute, but really, that doesn't quite get your heart pounding, does it?

Thankfully, bits of the surrounding love story do. Insurance man Louis (Romain Duris) doesn't hire Rose (Deborah Francois) as a secretary because of her qualifications, but he denies that looks have anything to do with it. He employs her after seeing how fast she types with only two fingers, seeing potential for a world championship run once she learns to use all 10. Like the Doris Day-era films to which "Populaire" nods, Louis and Rose claim to have no attraction to each other, which typically sounds like people who doth protest too much.

Co-starring backward-looking cinema's go-to (Berenice Bejo of "The Artist"), "Populaire" definitely needs more sass and pep. It's not that funny, and, other than the emphasis on Rose wanting to be an equal in a man's world, it doesn't reinvent or modernize its pastel-colored nostalgia. It also seems like Louis calling Rose "pumpkin" because that's what his mom calls him should be considered weird, not cute.

Even though the depiction of people gathered around radios, excitedly listening to broadcasts of Rose competing, tries to turn the film into "That Thing You Type!," the old-fashioned charms of "Populaire" rise above—largely because this sort of innocent, sincere pursuit of emotional fulfillment happens so rarely on screen these days. After all those words pounded onto the typewriter, this throwback finds a way to capture the big L in any language.

THIS WEEK'S TOP RELEASES

'Star Trek Into Darkness'

Star Trek Into Darkness

Although it's not as much fun as the 2009 "Star Trek" reboot, J.J. Abrams' sequel has the same major asset as its predecessor: a winning cast that ventures through space with the kind of amiable collegiality that made the original TV series such a joy. This time out, Chris Pine (as Kirk), Zachary Quinto (as Spock), Zoe Saldana (as Uhura) and Simon Pegg (as Scotty) are joined by the always-magnificent Benedict Cumberbatch, playing a mysterious superhuman villain looking to destroy the credibility of the Federation. Cumberbatch's character has a connection to "Star Trek" lore that the movie is too coy about for too long; and as with a lot of this summer's blockbusters, the film is overly violent. But it's a lively sci-fi action picture with personality—and those are fairly rare these days. Extras: Featurettes

Parade's End

"Star Trek"/"Sherlock" fans who'd like a little more Cumberbatch in their life should pick up this five-hour HBO/BBC miniseries, which has the actor playing an early 20th-century British aristocrat trapped in a loveless marriage with the mother of his child. Adapted by writer Tom Stoppard and director Susanna White from Ford Madox Ford's four-volume novel, "Parade's End" is like a more intimate and literary (and much less soapy) version of "Downton Abbey," similarly grappling with how social obligations stand in the way of personal happiness. It's a somber, slow-paced series, but beautiful to look at and beautifully acted.

Extras: Stoppard's interview with Elvis Mitchell for the Treatment.

We Steal Secrets: The Story of WikiLeaks

Prolific agit-prop documentarian Alex Gibney tackles one of his trickiest subjects yet in "We Steal Secrets: The Story of WikiLeaks," which tries to pin down the biography and motivations of elusive super-hacker Julian Assange. Gibney's documentaries tend to be full of detail, and though they have a point of view, they give a fair(ish) airing to different perspectives. But when it comes to Assange (who chose not to participate in the film and disputes its accuracy), Gibney seems less certain of what he believes, and the result is a film that's something of an info-dump, not unlike WikiLeaks itself. It's fascinating info, though, entertainingly presented.

Home- land: The Complete Second Season

The Emmy-winning first season of Showtime's political thriller ended with the manic CIA operative played by Claire Danes facing long-term hospitalization, while the war-hero-turned-terrorist that she tried to expose (Damian Lewis) was heading into politics. The strength of its second season is that it doesn't take too long to up-end the lives of its major characters and bring their various crises to a head, such that within a few episodes, it almost feels as if the whole series is going to wrap up early. But "Homeland" presses forward, and although some fans have grouched that the back half of Season 2 strains credulity, the series remains one of the most exciting and thought-provoking on TV. Extras: Deleted scenes and featurettes.

Another 'Harry Potter'?!

Meet Newt Scamander, J.K. Rowling's newest magical protagonist

Los Angeles Times

Magizoology is sure to be trending after Thursday's news that J.K. Rowling is returning to her Harry Potter roots. The bestselling author's new partnership with Warner Bros. will involve inventing a new series of movies based on Newt Scamander, the fictional author of Harry Potter's first-year textbook "Fantastic Beasts and Where to Find Them."

Turns out Mr. Scamander is a magizoologist, one who studies magical creatures. His book, which features 75 magical species found around the world, was culled from his years of travel across five continents.

Rowling, who earlier this year surprised readers by revealing that she was behind the pseudonym Robert Galbraith and the crime novel "The Cuckoo's Calling," said in the statement issued Thursday that the story will begin in New York, "70 years before Harry's gets underway."

However, the slim 42-page reference book, which Rowling published in 2001 after the fourth "Harry Potter" novel, contains a foreword from Albus Dumbledore, Hogwarts' beloved headmaster.

Whether Dumbledore plays a role in this new project is unclear.

Rowling said in the release that she liked Scamander so much she "even married his grandson, Rolf, to one of my favorite characters from the 'Harry Potter' series, Luna Lovegood."

Here is what else we know about Scamander: He was born in 1897 and sorted into the Hufflepuff house at Hogwarts. He became a magizoologist at the encouragement of his mother, who was a breeder of the hippogriff, a magical creature that is half eagle, half horse.

After graduating from Hogwarts, Scamander joined the wizard government, called the Ministry of Magic, where he worked in the Department for the Regulation and Control of Magical Creatures. His career included the creation of the Werewolf Register of 1947, the 1965 passage of the Ban on Experimental Breeding and many research trips for the Dragon Research and Restraint Bureau.

He is said to have written "Fantastic Beasts" in 1918. At some point in his life, he was headmaster of Hogwarts.

It's safe to say that Scamander's adventurous life is ripe for further exploration and that all the stories will be chock full of computer-generated characters, including werewolves, dragons and hippogriffs.

Tiaras & tattoos

Reuters

A Kansas woman hoping to be crowned the next Miss America on Sunday night keeps her personal mission statement close to her heart: It's tattooed on her torso.

Miss Kansas Theresa Vail became the first Miss America contestant to visibly show her tattoos during competitions this week, pageant officials said. Her two pieces of ink are expected to be on display during Sunday's nationally televised pageant.

Tattoos aren't the only thing that sets Vail, 22, apart from her beauty queen competitors. She's also a member of the Kansas National Guard, making her the second contestant in the history of the Miss America Pageant to be an active member of the military.

Sgt. Vail, who lists her hobbies as hunting, archery and cooking, addressed her tattoos on her personal blog. She said her decision to not cover them during the contest was an attempt to challenge traditional definitions of beauty and femininity.

"I do not want to shock the nation when I'm seen in a swimsuit, bearing my marks," she wrote.

G I am opting to show them proudly."

—Miss Kansas, Theresa Vail, is believed to be the first contestant in the pageant's history to show off her tattoos.

"I am opting to show them proudly."

Her goal, she said is "empowering women to OVERCOME stereotypes and break barriers."

Vail's two tattoos include her "personal mission statement," the Serenity Prayer, down the right side of her torso. It reads "God, grant me the serenity to accept the things I cannot change, courage to change the things I can and wisdom to know the difference."

Her other tattoo is the insignia of the U.S. Army Dental Corps on her left shoulder. Vail says she hopes to go on to dental school in the future.

The 2014 Miss America will be crowned Sunday night.

The straight men you will meet at gay bars

Zach Stafford

redeye@tribune.com
@ZachStafford

The first time I went to a gay bar was after my senior prom. My friends and I were tired of seeing our classmates drunkenly grind on each other and decided to go to the gay clubs in Nashville since they were 18-plus.

Right when we walked in, we headed straight to the dance floor. A few minutes into dancing to the Pussycat Dolls' "When I Grow Up" club remix, I noticed a guy sandwiched in between a blonde girl and slick gel-headed boy. I remember thinking, "Wow, a bisexual!" (I was still very new to being gay.) Suddenly, I saw his face: It was my "straight" best friend. After kissing his male dancing partner's neck, he looked up to catch me staring and then ran away to the bar. If I have learned anything since that moment, it is that he isn't an anomaly. There are lots of "straight" men at gay bars, all of them there for different reasons. And you should get to know three of them:

The Doorman

Gay bars are notorious for hiring straight men to work the door. I think that by hiring them, owners figure they won't have to worry about them sleeping with a majority of their clientele. There also seems to be this exotic factor to having shirtless straight men at your local gay bar. These guys are some of the nicest you'll meet at the bar. They're also the quickest to flirt with gay men just for the hell of it. (Oh hai, Chandler at Minibar! *waves*)

The Roommate

Since I have been in Chicago, I have figured out that the cool thing for straight men to do isn't playing sports or marrying a supermodel—it's living with a gay dude.

Exhibit A: My roommate. He is a great—too great, actually—and all my gay friends love him. They bring him up incessantly. Over the years, he has become fluent in all things "gay" and, as a result, has become comfortable—sometimes too comfortable—accompanying me to Boystown bars.

The reason? He's learned that sometimes, the one thing women love more than dancing with a gay guy who doesn't want to sleep with them is dancing with a straight guy who does—right in front of a group of gays who want to sleep with him.

The Closet Case

This is the guy who comes in with his girlfriend, who just loves all her gay friends and casually flirts with all the guys, all for "fun." Flirting is all nice and dandy, and it doesn't mean one is gay. But The Closet Case is the guy who has one hand on his girlfriend's shoulder and the other on some random guy's butt, which is not OK.

Recently, I was out with some friends and this straight couple befriended us. After a few drinks and an hour of the boyfriend giving me all the attention, he announced that we needed to have a "hug fight." He reached across the table and embraced me while his girlfriend laughed. He even invited me to lunch the next day with a wink.

The girlfriend pulled me aside before they left, asking, "Isn't he great?" I responded, "Oh, yes! Totally!" because I heard, "Isn't he gay?" I didn't realize my mistake until it was too late and they had left.

I'm sure I will get my chance again, because the one thing more abundant in Chicago's gay bars than vodka is a good ol' closet case.

6 rules for dating during college football season

Ernest Wilkins

» erwilkins
» @tribune.com
» @ernestwilkins

What makes a fan a real fan? Is it buying tickets or T-shirts? What about tattoos? When it comes to college football, I think you can factor dating habits into how obsessed a fan is about his or her team. I know people who won't even consider dating someone who went to a different school.

You may say it's crazy; I say there's something to it. Dating is a contact sport. A spirited debate rose up in the RedEye newsroom this week about how to date when you're a die-hard supporter of your university.

Some of this is simple. If you're dating someone who went to a rival school, you buy one of those tacky "house divided" license plates and don't have sex the week they play or something.

But what about that gray area? What are the rules of rooting when it comes to dating? Allow me to assist.

» If you're dating someone who went to a school that doesn't have a significant football team (for the purposes of this column, "significant" means they're a playable team in "NCAA Football 14"): That person should root for your team.

» If you and your s/o went to big schools in the same conference: Root separately but give a halfhearted effort when they aren't playing your school.

» If you both went to football powerhouses but you never play each other: Show some love. If you're dating, wear a shirt in their color if you're watching a game with them. If you're married or quickly heading in that direction, take the plunge and buy some official apparel.

» What if your school is amazing at one sport and terrible at the rest? (Looking at you, Indiana grads): Root for your school, but be aware that you might need to do a little moonlighting during the offseason.

» Don't blindly assume that just because your sweetheart went to a football powerhouse that they give a crap about the team. If they don't care about football and you do, then they should root for your team.

» If you don't care what people think and choose to root all the way for the team your BF/GF supports, don't become one of those smug SOBs. You know, the kind who says "we" and acts like you've been supporting since Day 1. Everyone hates bandwagon fans, but bandwagon-in-law fans are even worse.

My partner pleases me—in other ways

Dear Anna,
I'm a single mom and had been out of the dating scene since my youngest (now 10) was born. I recently became involved with a man who introduced me to fisting. I have to admit, though, albeit strange and new, it was more pleasurable than traditional intercourse. Two-part question: Is fisting common or new? And why does he get mad at me after I've had an orgasm that way?

Anna Pulley

» radeye@tribune.com
» @annapulley

Dear reader,
You know, in all my years of advice-giving, I've heard some pretty strange things, but this is the first instance I've encountered where a man was jealous of his own fist. Fisting, for those who don't know, is the sexual act of inserting a fist into the vagina or anus. It has also been called "handballing" or "brachioprocotic insertion."

As to the origins of fisting, information on the topic is, well, slippery. The Roman emperor Caligula was rumored to have engaged in anal fisting. And one thread pins its origins on philosopher and grad-school staple Michel Foucault. While I couldn't verify any of these scenarios, (the Foucault theory is especially improbable), it's likely that fisting has been going on for a long time, but that it wasn't being written about in Ladies Home Journal and what-have-you. Sexpert Tristan Taormino places the popularization of the act in the '60s and '70s, when gay leathermen brought private fisting clubs to major metropolitan areas during the sexual revolution.

Is it common? Probably not as common as porn would have us believe (but then, what is?).

As to why your lover gets mad at you after giving you alternate pleasure, I'd venture a guess that he's either insecure about his girth or has some strange notion that intercourse when his penis isn't directly involved doesn't "count." (Out of curiosity: does he also think oral doesn't count as sex?) At the very least, remind him that his fist, much like his penis, is attached to him, and therefore he still gets the credit. If he keeps it up though, find a new lover who will please you without all the sex shaming.

The Lowe down

A magical mystery tour through one man's onscreen hair

By Dana Moran | REDEYE

We, urrrrr, uhhhh, can't believe someone is putting out another Death Of JFK Movie (TM), but here we go again. This time, Rob Lowe is filling the doomed president's shoes in National Geographic's "Killing Kennedy," premiering Nov. 10, and he has the ridiculous accent to prove it. But something else stood out to us—Rob's perfectly coiffed preppy '60s hairstyle. It's time to chart his chameleon-like hair throughout his career to see which mane has suited him best, and which has been downright insane. (He's also starring as Ulysses S. Grant in a TV miniseries, and you can't imagine how sad we are that there aren't photos yet.)

red hot MONEY SHOTS

Sure, we know they're really, really, insanely rich, but how do some of our favorite stars pull down their millions?

The Hollywood Reporter went behind the bank accounts to reveal some OMG facts. Cameron Diaz made $42 million from 2011's "Bad Teacher"—all because she only took a $1 million initial payout and made the rest on the back end. Catherine Zeta-Jones made $20 million in her two years as a T-Mobile spokeswoman. And our friend R. Patz claimed a $15 million payday for hawk-ing Dior Homme fragrance.

Wait and see

You'd think that as a "Downton Abbey" alum, Dan Stevens, aka the dearly departed Matthew Crawley, would have early access to the new season. Not so much. "I have to wait until January like everybody else, and watch it on PBS, because I live in America now," he told vulture.com. Oh he does, does he...

Back in session

"Community" is taking yet another step to make everything all better with its fans. Tvline.com reports that John Oliver, who starred as Prof. Ian Duncan during the show's first season, will be back for at least six episodes of the new season. Guess he's got a little time on his hands now that Jon Stewart is back in the "Daily Show" hosting seat.

Fantasy tacos

Who's the very last artist you think of when you hear "Chipotle"? Is it Fiona Apple? If so, you're in for a pretty big surprise. The quirky singer (who, BTW, is vegan), covered "Pure Imagination" from "Willy Wonka and the Chocolate Factory" for an animated Chipotle ad. The lengthy spot and Apple's version of the song itself both are pretty gorgeous. Tacos, also, are lovely, now that we think about it.

THE QUOTE

"She's Marilyn Monroe and then you meet her older sister; everything that's dark and wrong about her at that age is why you become infatuated with her."

—Justin Timberlake, to The New York Times, on the differences between his two "20/20 Experience" albums. Part 2, out Sept. 30, is the "hotter, older evil twin sister" of the first iteration. So, like, future sexy?

That's how much Kristen Stewart was paid to chat with a Middle Eastern prince for 15 minutes, the Los Angeles Times reports. But she's not greedy—the money was a donation to charities providing superstorm Sandy relief. We're still betting it was an awkward conversation. MCT FILE PHOTO
